Dick Clark, Dead at Age 82

Robin Arryn

Dick Clark, U.S. entertainment media cultural icon, died at St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica, California on Wednesday of a heart attack, according to his publicist Paul Shefrin. He was 82 years old.

"Attempts to resuscitate were unsuccessful," Shefrin said.

In December 2004, months after going public with his Type 2 diabetes, Clark experienced a mild stroke, after which he did less on-camera.

Clark was a charismatic and successful entertainment-industry businessman. His business Dick Clark Productions featured teen dance television programs, prime-time specials, game shows, and movies. Known as "America's Oldest Teenager," Clark was known for his roles as host of American Bandstand and Dick Clark's New Year's Rockin' Eve. He was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1993.

"I'm encouraged by the many people who tell me I'm an inspiration to them," Clark said in an email interview with USA Today last December. He also said he would try to stay positive "and attack every day with the thought things are going to get better."

Clark is survived by his wife, two sons, and daughter.

Hunt for "Vampire Killer" Widens

Sandor Clegane

With over seven deaths attributed to the serial murderer that has become popularly known as the "Vampire Killer", police have turned to local citizens for assistance.

"If you know of anybody who is engaging in cult like activities, especially with any focus on the occult, blood or vampirism, we ask you to call our special toll free hotline at 1-877-936-8422. We will continue to investigate these crimes, but it is through the eyes and ears of our citizens that we can best stop depraved individuals such as these."

The first victims were found near a Japanese cultural festival earlier this week, and the most recent behind K & S World Market on Nolensville Pike. All victims have been young and white.

TSA Welfare Stops in Middle TN

Jon Umber

John S. Pistole, Administrator of the TSA, announced Thursday that a series of citizen welfare checkpoints around middle Tennessee would commence operation in mid May.

In a press conference, local TSA agent Todd Brooks said, "The checkpoints will assist security and send a message to terrorists that we do not fear them and will not let our way of life be altered by their tragic attacks."

The stops will be random in nature and occur 24 hours a day, seven days a week on both highways and local routes in and around Nashville and surrounding areas. Local law enforcement will not be providing support, as a team of special agents will be arriving to assist in arrests.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

It's cold as heck! We've jumped the temp up, and tried to pull everything in: I had started Vampire in April to try and avoid this, but hey... unless you're an Archmage, you can't change the weather.

Craig has offered to assist, and will be helping with sign in. Much thanks go to him! If you do thank him, let the ST know at sign-in.

I know the pins stink. We've ordered new clips that should be much better.

Look over your character sheet: I transcribed them all, but did them assembly line style, so I may have missed a whole section.
